

Types of Photography

The below information are the different types of photography. Create a new blog post on your wordpress account, copy and paste the below text into your blog post. Open a new tab (COMMAND - T) google search type of Photography, go to images and find your favorite image that represents that particular type of photography, post the image after each definition on your blog post and remember to give credit to the photographer that took the photo.
***You will be quizzed on the photography types and terms.

- 1. Fashion Photography: This genre of photography is one of the most lucrative kinds. Photographs are one of the most effective ways of communication in the world of fashion. Here, photography is used to bring attention to the clothes and the accessories. Models are exclusively selected to showcase products in the best way possible. Fashion photographers today create the particular look, either in natural environment or one that is created in the studio. Often, these fashionable photographers find their way in the leading fashion magazines. These magazines cater to the niche crowd that loves to know the best in clothing and other fashion accessories.
- 2. Glamor Photography: Glamor photography is also about fashionable visuals, however with a touch of difference. Glamor photography highlights the model in a different light rather than laying emphasis on the clothing or accessories. Often, nude images are also a part of glamor photography. These can be found on the covers of magazines like 'Playboy'.
- 3. Advertising Photography: Advertising photography is all about creating the right environment to highlight the product to be advertised in the best way possible. The photographers generally come up with ideas on visuals or at times, design houses also brief photographers with the concept required in order to obtain the specific results. These photographs are always planned in co-ordination with the advertising firm.
- 4. Still Life Photography: Still life photography is all about capturing objects on camera that are deliberately grouped together to create a particular composition. This form of art requires the photographer to have an excellent sense of composition and lighting. A photographer in this case can create different textures and use objects that add interest to an otherwise normal composition.
- 5. Wedding Photography: Wedding photography is a specialized field of this art form, which is dedicated to snapping the most memorable moments in various creative ways. A photographer can take his/her own approach towards this subject. While some prefer the traditional 'posed' ways, there are others who base their photographs purely on the actual moment. Photographers can also make these pictures fashionable with particular themes if agreeable with the client. There are many cases where such glamorous wedding photographs are captured especially in the studio. Today, many people are willing to explore new ideas, which open up many new creative avenues for experts in wedding photography.
- 6. Fine Art Photography: Fine art photography is all about visuals that resemble a work of art. These are highly creative images that have an abstract appeal. Therefore, these photographs can be equivalent to an artist's expression on canvas. This genre of photography is not restricted for commercial purposes but could be used for creative pursuits as well. A fine art photographer should have the ability to look beyond the obvious settings.
- 7. Nature Photography: Nature photographers are very much sought-after by media houses. Works of these creative geniuses can be seen in magazines like 'National Geographic'. Nature photography encompasses various other types of photography, such as-
  - 8. Landscape Photography: These photographs mainly highlight the natural beauty of any place. It includes areas of wilderness, deserts, mountains or even waterfalls.
  - 9. Underwater Photography: Underwater photography is an interesting art form that explores a whole new world beneath the deep blue seas. It's an extremely challenging task because a photographer should be equipped with all the knowledge about swimming and scuba diving to capture the best images while swimming in the blue waters!
  - 10. Seascape Photography: Capturing nature in her many moods would be interesting for all lovers of the environment. A photographer who is dedicated completely to seascape photography should always lie in wait for the beauty of the sea to unfold. Here the concentration is mainly on capturing various moods of the ocean, at different times of the day or even seasons!
  - 11. Cloudscape Photography: This genre of photography is completely dedicated to capturing various images of the cloud formations. Black and white photography in particular can be creatively used for this branch of photography.
  - 12. Travel Photography: Travel photography involves capturing images of a particular landscape or even people from different countries. A photographer who is dedicated to this type of photography captures various traditions and customs of a place.
  - 13. Architectural Photography: Architectural photography, as the name suggests, is all about the capturing images of different styles of architecture in different lights. This type of photography would require the photographers to be an expert in the technical, as well as the visual department.
  - 14. Portrait Photography: Portrait photography is all about capturing the mood of a person with an emphasis on the face and expression of a person. This style of photography need not only be about professional models, it can encompass any kind of a person. Family portrait photographs are very much in demand but this does not mean it's all about a basic snapshot. There are many creative ways a photographer can use to make a portrait photograph look equally stunning!
  - 15. Photojournalism: Photojournalism is all about telling a story about a particular event or incident through a single photograph. This genre of photography is used mainly by publications to represent the latest news. In this case, the photographer's visuals and the writer's story should complement each other. For example, if a writer is making a specific mention of a particular location in the story, the photographer can find innovative ways to capture the same on camera. Photojournalism can be further classified into -
    - 16. Documentary photography: Here, the photographer has to present an image that best represents the incident being spoken of in true form. In this case, press photographers usually submit their images to the